One of the methods of protection is to make sure that your wi-fi network is not compatible with the smartphones/smart IoT or else the hackers can easily access the network. In addition, you can alter the security settings in order to prevent people from accessing your Wi-Fi network. With increasing popularity, hackers also found out different methods to con your wi-fi network. After changing the default password, you have to restart the router and it will ask for username and password to allow you to connect to the net. Don't forget that you might end up carrying a few additional viruses while trying to change the default Wi-Fi password. However, you are bound to fully connect to the router once you enter the password. Once you have changed the password, then you need to restart the router. Setting the router's SSID to something other than the default on the building's Wi-Fi AP can also disallow the access to the building's Wi-Fi network from smartphones or tablets. When you set the SSID to something else, the default Wi-Fi router password will be revealed. In other words, the router will be a very useful tool in detecting the intruder.
